PlayWrite 2009

Theatre-in-The-Making's PlayWrite program recognizes that young people have powerful things to say. For its eighth season, Brian Haney will take a company of students through the PlayWrite process: select and develop a theme, write and collect material, and present the ensemble's work in an original production on a local stage. The results are sometimes provocative, but always rewarding for both actors and audiences.

In past PlayWrite productions, students have given voice to their visions of the world, addressing such themes as the human body or belief, exploring the world through the works of the Brothers Grimm and Shakespeare or even unexpected topics such as the Periodic Table of Elements. As always, PlayWrite 2009 will address a brand new theme devised by the students in the workshop.

PlayWrite offers a unique opportunity for students to collaborate in developing their ideas, transforming them into a finished piece of theatrical art. Together, they use workshops to define and expand the themed material, refine their skills as writers and actors, and so build an ensemble based on trust and mutual support – an environment in which their individual and collective abilities can find true expression. Theatre-in-The-Making's commitment to ensemble acting means that everyone participates and everyone's voice is heard in PlayWrite's final production.

Theatre-in-The-Making is accepting registrations now. Classes begin on February 2, 2009, meeting Mondays and Wednesdays from 4-6pm.

On March 30, one month from performances, the workshop will increase its rehearsal schedule and meet Monday through Thursday from 4-6pm.

Tuition for the three-month class is $200. All rehearsals will be held from 4-6pm at the North Fourth Art Center (4904 Fourth Street NW – just north of Griegos and 4th St.).
